

Responding to the Climate Emergency Together

*Nurturing our relationship with God and all that God has Created in a spirit of love through biblical study, theological reflection, contemplation and spiritual practices — especially in special places in creation.

*Studying the root causes (the structural injustice) of the climate emergency so that we understand better what needs to change in our lives and the life of society.

*Learning about the interconnectedness between the damage done to the environment and the economic, social and political injustices of our world such as poverty and racism.

*Seeking opportunities to foster relationships with the rest of creation, especially those areas seriously affected by climate change and with the peoples, animals and plants in those areas.

*Changing the way we live so that we use much less, reduce waste and minimise our carbon footprint.

*Working in genuine solidarity with the people most affected by the climate emergency in their struggle for climate justice.

*Being committed to promoting listening to people on both sides of the climate divide in Queensland and finding ways to overcome fears and to unite people in a common purpose

*Being prepared to take prophetic action in the spirit of Christ in order to resist the degradation of the earth and the harm done to its peoples, animals and plants

*Trying to take climate action which is strategically focused on effecting change for the better rather than keeping a relative handful of committed people very busy.
